Integration and cooperation

Why?

Our clients often tell us that their directors are brilliant at their work within their departments and teams, yet they do not have the time to spend it with each other to exchange some thoughts or even to get to know each other better in order to cooperate yet more effectively. This is exactly why we have devised this project. Thanks to its surprising form, your executive management team will not only get inspired and develop in chosen areas, but they will also spend interesting time, gaining increased self-awareness and discovering each other.

Integration and cooperation

How?

Choosing from an extensive range of our original three-hour workshops, you can devise a year-long cycle of meetings. Your directors will be constantly surprised by our unconventional and creative workshops that cater for the integration needs of the whole team.

What?

Choose four, six, or eight meetings, arranged within three month intervals, which will allow for strengthening cooperation and enhanced integration of your team of directors.

What?

Values and talents

Basing on the famous experiment by Michael Baum, the Participants shall be invited to an art gallery. There, using instant cameras, they will take photos that depict values characterizing the team. In discovering their mutual interpretations, they shall get to know each other even better within their teams. Then, describing portraits drawn by a graphic artist, while having dinner together, they tell stories related to the talents they bring into the team.

What?

Cooperation – Game

The participants play a strategic game designed by Piasecka&Żylewicz experts. They move to the cosmic world, and their ambitious task is to win as much as they can. During the game they discover that it is the cooperation that pays off the most. They also learn rules related to social attitudes, to team roles, to organization roles that are significant in the context of cooperation. They discover the power of their habits, attitudes and beliefs that affect the quality of cooperation, and, what follows, that affect their business results.

What?

Cooperation – Photo session

The participants engage a unique photo session. Its aim is to visualize their leadership styles and their personal talents. They build up their awareness of every person being different and every person having their own communication style. The photos are taken in a renowned film studio, and they are accompanied with information on communication. Participants may then use them in their work with themselves and with their teams.

What?

Charisma

Every leader, as in the model by Olivia Fox Cabane, can develop their charisma in order to wield effective impact on their team members.

This can be done on three different levels.

Power, mindfulness and warmth are the three areas in which we can develop our leadership styles. If we relate this to a metaphor of mixture – whether looking for ingredients for ones ideal drink, or composing one's perfect perfume scent, we look for combinations of flavours or scents which suit us best. All these elements, combined with practical development techniques for the three levels of power, mindfulness and warmth, can be used by every director in their everyday work with their teams – and not only with them.

What?

Emotional intelligence

A high level of emotional intelligence is an undeniable advantage of any outstanding leader. No matter what the strengths and inborn talents are, emotional intelligence can be developed on four levels. Following the very practical, skill based model by Mayer, Solovey and Caruso, participants discover four inspirations for each of the levels.

These inspirations are combined with dance – supervised by professional dancers, we can express and read the emotions of others, combining our rational mind and our emotional mind, and using our emotions for an even more accurate assessment of reality. We can also develop managing our emotions in difficult and challenging situations.

What?

Acting techniques in business

As they work with professional actors in a real theatre, the participants discover the secrets of experts useful in business communication. They develop techniques of non-verbal communication and learn how to talk “to” and not “about”, also on the level of body language and tone of voice.

Participants receive individual “prescriptions” with activities that match their development needs in this area, and they gain an awareness of their strengths and communication advantages. This allows them to communicate even more efficiently with teams, internal and external clients, and other directors.

What?

Creativity

Even if we cannot play instruments and we do not know what we want to create, we can record an interesting music piece. Using creativity, believing in oneself and in the synergy and cooperation of the team can often result in miracles, even in situations which seem deadlocked. The participants, working under the supervision of a professional musician, create two pieces, simultaneously paying attention to building on failures and difficult situations, learning how to talk about them and why it matters so much to share them with others.
